Forecast for Wednesday 31 Jan 2024

Weather: Cloudy at first in the west, clearer in the east. Rain or summit snow arrives from the northwest through late morning, and spreads southeast through the day clearing mid to late afternoon. This is accompanied by storm force south to southwesterly summit winds, with gales down to low levels. Clearer conditions arrive late afternoon into early evening as winds turn westerly and begin to ease down, but a few snow showers feed in from the west.

Chance of cloud-free hill tops above 800m: 50% at first, falling to less than 10%, rising again to 70% later.

Low cloud and visibility: Patchy cloud below 600-700m at first with moderate visibilities, clearer in the east. Bases falling to 400-500m for a time with poor visibilities. Generally excellent visibilities later with cloud bases around 800m, but cloud bases and visibilities deteriorating rapidly in any snow showers.

Met Office Aberdeen Meteorologist's View

Gale force to storm force winds will mean making progress is difficult, tiring and hazardous over exposed ground. Heavy persistent rain or summit snow for a time will make for unpleasant conditions, reduced visibility and slippery surfaces. Cold temperatures combined with strong winds may cause severe wind chill.

Forecast for Thursday 01 Feb 2024

Weather: A few snow showers at first ease through the morning. Then a band of rain, preceded by summit snow, pushes east across the ranges through the afternoon as westerly winds strengthen to gale force.

Maximum wind: generally 35-45mph, gusts 45-55mph, but up to 65mph later, up to 75mph on the highest peaks.

Chance of cloud-free hill tops above 800m: 60% falling to less than 20%.

Low cloud and visibility: Scattered cloud bases at around summit level at first, falling in showers with very poor visibility. Extensive low cloud with poor visibility and bases 300-400m arriving later.

Temperature: Glens: Plus 3 Celsius rising to plus 6.
At 800m: Minus 2 Celsius rising to plus 2.
Freezing level: 600-800m rising above summits later.
